RESOLUTION NO. 142-00 Re: THE SYSTEM OF SHARED ACCOUNTABILITY AND THE TEACHER EVALUATION SYSTEM

On February 10, 2000, the Research and Evaluation Committee (Mr. Felton, Mrs. Gordon, and Ms. Signer) met with the Superintendent’s staff to discuss the planned MCPS System of Shared Accountability, including the new teacher evaluation system. Although we have identified several issues that still must be clarified and/or resolved, the members of the committee recommend unanimously that the Board of Education endorse the work completed thus far.

The Board of Education should note the extraordinary efforts undertaken to design this accountability system in an open and inclusive manner. The committee was impressed with the ample evidence of the degree to which key constituency groups have been involved – and will continue to be involved – in every aspect of developing a system of shared accountability.

System of Shared Accountability: The System of Shared Accountability includes several unique features. Five components comprise the system, including indices to measure student and staff performance as well as a decision support system, a reporting system, and a target-setting process. The entire system is built on multiple indicators that will provide checks and balances to allow school-based and central office staff to view each school’s performance in a context that facilitates instructional improvement. Resource allocations, professional development, and staff performance evaluations will be linked through proficiency, productivity, equity, and quality indices. Each of those indices will incorporate multiple measures, including state and local academic assessments and indicators of school climate.

Although the framework for the system is conceptually complete and has been modeled with actual school data, work remains to be done, particularly in the identification of appropriate high school measures. Research and Evaluation Committee members asked staff to examine other indicators, such as school-to-work measures, in addition to MCPS countywide final examinations and the Maryland high school assessments that are in developmental stages. Student performance measures for elementary and middle schools are generally available but further work is needed for grades K-2 and special populations. Because the system is designed to be flexible and adaptable over time, measures will be added or deleted as the system evolves. The standard-setting process for the indices and other measures is in progress, and design of the decision support system has begun.

New Teacher Evaluation System: A significant feature of the System of Shared Accountability will be a new teacher evaluation system predicated upon recognition of the complexity and importance of interactive teaching and holding educators accountable for student results. All teachers will be expected to examine student outcome data and adjust classroom practices to improve student achievement. The new teacher evaluation system will provide the structure, procedures, and resources to identify teachers who meet or exceed standards and to provide support to those below standard. The attached paper describes the system’s key components: the use of student results; the standards and rubrics; the professional growth cycle; the Peer Assistance and Review (PAR) Program; and a plan for staff training.

The Research and Evaluation Committee identified the following issues related to the teacher evaluation system that require clarification or further development:

• Use of a holistic rating will require mechanisms to ensure inter-rater reliability.

• The proficiency, productivity, equity, and quality indicators should be incorporated into individual teacher evaluations.

• Clarification is needed of the potentially overlapping roles of the school’s instructional leadership, staff development teachers, PAR consulting teachers, and mentors.

• Criteria and procedures must be developed to recognize excellence for teachers who exceed the standards.

• Criteria/qualifications must be developed for the selection of PAR panel members and consulting teachers.

• The role of the community superintendent should be clarified.

• A contingency plan should be developed for the negotiated clause that allows discontinuation of the PAR program with 30 days notice of either party.

Future updates to the Research and Evaluation Committee and the Board of Education will provide opportunities to further discuss these issues.

The following items were provided to the Board of Education:

1. A preliminary edition of a booklet describing the System of Shared Accountability
2. Two companion documents to the booklet
   Technical Specifications for School Performance Indices
   Reviews and commentary on the proposed System of Shared Accountability
3. A paper describing the proposed teacher evaluation system
4. A brief on Using Student Results in the Teacher Evaluation System
5. A copy of the slides used in the presentation to the Board of Education

Re: DISCUSSION

Ms. Signer, chair of the Research and Evaluation Subcommittee, stated that the shared accountability and new teacher evaluation plan represented two bold initiatives on the part of MCPS. The System of Shared Accountability had been developed jointly by the employee organizations, MCCPTA, and staff. This had been a long and complex process, but in the end it had been very rewarding for all involved. The system is focused on children and student results with checks and balances.

Mr. Felton extended his appreciation to staff members, calling their work a turning point for public education in the nation. Shared accountability would ensure that all students succeed, would be an investment in staff, and would ensure challenging curricula for Montgomery County.

Mrs. Gordon noted that the subcommittee had asked a lot of questions and debated a number of issues. In the end, that had been a healthy process for all participants. In the past, a question or debate carried a negative message. However, this process of questions and debate led to an improved process and product.

Dr. Seleznow explained that the eight qualities of shared accountability are:
1. Assures a system that accounts for every student
2. Unifies the entire school system in working for the student
3. Enables the school system to see patterns and trends
4. Uses student performance data to improve student performance
5. Directs resources to where they are needed most
6. Promotes the ideas of collaboration, professional growth, and peer review
7. Guarantees the success of other trend benders
8. Gives the community the comparison data it wants and needs

The new teacher evaluation system is an integrated system. The design of the teacher evaluation system starts with the recognition of the complexity and importance of interactive teaching and the need to hold educators accountable for student results. Of all the factors that are important to productive schools – and there are many – nothing is as important as what individual teachers believe, know, and do. That is why teacher efficacy is the linchpin of improving student performance. At the same time, the measure of what students know and do is the index of productivity in schools. Recognition of the complex and sophisticated nature of teaching and systemwide accountability for student results requires structures, procedures, and resources that focus all educators in the county on examining student results and adjusting pedagogical practices to improve these results.

One unique aspect of this teacher evaluation system is that it is respectful yet demanding of teachers. It acknowledges the accumulated knowledge and skill of experienced practitioners and demands that they continue to improve by using data to examine how their teaching affects student learning. All components of the evaluation system include the examination of student results and teaching practice through individual and collegial reflection.

Another unique aspect of this teacher evaluation system is its fit with the larger system of variables that influence teacher capacity – namely induction, professional development, teacher advancement, and the professional culture of the school. In a complex, interconnected system, a change in one element affects all the others. This teacher evaluation system is consciously designed to strengthen all these elements.

The new system acknowledges teachers’ rights and abilities to shape their own professional development, yet requires that they channel their professional development efforts to support school and system goals. It cultivates a climate of openness, collegiality, and experimentation by encouraging teachers to use each other as resources for content and pedagogical knowledge so that they can improve their individual and collaborative practices. Yet it deals with unsatisfactory teaching in ways that are clear, supportive, and decisive. It provides a high degree of support for teachers who are new or in difficulty and emphasizes building-based support for all teachers to pursue the continuous improvement of their teaching. It provides administrators with the training to evaluate teachers and to hold skillful conferences with high- and low-performing teachers, and it emphasizes their role as instructional leaders and culture builders for their schools as professional communities.

The new teacher evaluation system integrates a number of elements that are usually treated separately or not found in other evaluation systems. These essential elements are as follows:

1. high and clear standards for teacher performance
2. high quality, detailed, useful analysis of and feedback about teaching, by trained evaluators
3. a process for recognizing excellence in teaching
4. a direct relationship to the system of shared accountability including use of the student results' indices of proficiency, productivity, equity, and quality
5. shared responsibility by the administration and the teachers' association for continuous improvement of teacher quality
6. new structures and resources supporting continuous improvement of teaching
7. integration of teacher evaluation with a teacher's annual goal setting and professional development plan, the Local School Success for Every Student Plan, and building-level support structures for achieving the objectives outlined in these plans
8. data-based decision making at the heart of both professional development and evaluation of teachers
9. inclusion of student results in teacher evaluations in ways that are fair, informative, and responsible.

The teacher evaluation system is a true system – that is, a deliberate design of many interacting parts that complement and reinforce one another toward a specific outcome. The outcome elevates learning results for all students, not just for some. The means come from improving the teaching of all teachers, not just of some. The sum of these interacting parts of this new teacher evaluation system is a quality-control mechanism that eliminates substandard teaching and develops a culture of continuous improvement of teaching.

Mrs. O'Neill congratulated staff for development of shared accountability and the new teacher evaluation system. She thought it was a remarkable system in which each child would be treated with high expectations. The only worry she had was technology and data gathering.

Mrs. King asked what part of the plan the everyday teacher in the classroom needed to understand, and how the school system would get that information to all teachers. Dr. Seleznov replied that teachers would want the data to increase student performance and that teachers become empowered when they have data readily available on student performance in order to ascertain the best teaching practices for individual students.

Mrs. King asked how the average teacher in the classroom would learn about teacher evaluation. Dr. Seleznow said there would be training and communication directly with teachers.

Mr. Abrams noted that during the presentation data was disaggregated by both racial and socioeconomic groups. This information would allow the school system to solve problems rather than publicize statistics. Another issue was equity and productivity. The productivity is individualized, no teacher would be held accountable for another’s failure, and the measures would be computed for the time the student was in that class.

Mrs. Gordon noted that there were critics who said that using shared accountability would keep the high-performing student down and that would be the way to close the academic gap. Dr. Seleznow replied that the system would clearly identify instances where such a practiced appeared. Dr. Weast pointed out that the new system had several indexes designed to identify equity, proficiency, productivity, and quality.

Mrs. Gordon asked about the quality index and the indicators. She hoped that actions that should take place, such as suspensions, would continue for the betterment of all students. Dr. Seleznow replied that these indexes were not finalized, and staff would be careful to avoid any unintended consequences.

Mrs. Gordon pointed out comments that had been made about the heavy use of measures and standards for college-bound students and what happens to students who would go directly into the workplace after high school. Also, the school would not appear as successful if its students did not go to college. Dr. Seleznow replied that staff was looking into this issue.

Mrs. Gordon raised the topic of teacher evaluation, saying that the system was part of a total professional development program. The focus must be on the positive results of training and mentoring.

Mr. Burnett thought the school system was definitely moving in the right direction. He thought that technology and funding were the two biggest roadblocks to fully implement the system. He believed that all staff should learn about shared accountability because it was important to all children.

Mr. Felton thought it was a defining moment for MCPS, as well as nationally. The relationships and expectations of parents, teachers, principals, and students would change because they would have access to more data. It would take a tremendous allocation of resources to ensure that all the components were in place, and the school system must present this plan to the County Council, the Governor, and federal officials.

Ms. Signer commented about scores of all students used and the proficiency index. Schools with a learning center would have an impact on the proficiency ranking and published data. She was concerned about the lack of a measure of socioeconomic status and value-added equations. Mr. Larson replied that experts disagreed about the appropriateness of adjusting for “fairness” variables, which would make separate standards for each group.

Ms. Sampedro was delighted and pleased to see the start of shared accountability and the new teacher evaluation system. Students had been interested in having the best teachers the system could offer. She hoped that the system would be communicated to students to help them understand their role.

Dr. Weast noted that this system was a process. The system had to build a tremendous capacity, and it would take time. Tonight, staff gave the Board the vision that it can be done – that it was technologically and humanly possible to do it. The Board would have to be patient and continue to work for lower class sizes, teacher developers, technological support, teacher training, and invest in administrators.
