

Your task is to investigate an issue or event related to US History through a movie and a non-fiction book. You may choose anything that interests you; however, you may not choose a cartoon, musical, or documentary. For example, you could watch The Crucible and read A Delusion of Satan by Frances Hill if you're interested in the Salem Witch Trials or watch the movie version of The Right Stuff and read Thomas Wolfe's book too. You can choose the film first and then seek out a book, or vice-versa. Either way, you should do a little preliminary research early this summer to choose a good film and an interesting, accessible book. A trip to the public library is certainly in order.

The work product for this assignment is a 3-4 page reflection and analysis following this template.

Paragraph 1: Introduction to the topic. Provide a general overview of the context of your topic. Why is it significant? Why did you pick it?

Paragraph 2: Summarize your film. What does it tell you about the topic? Be sure to provide three or more illustrative examples.

Paragraphs 3-5: Choose three issues covered by both the film and book. Compare and/or contrast how each covers the topic.

Paragraph 6: Which source proved better for understanding the past? Explain the strengths and weaknesses of both sources here.

Paragraph 7: Conclude with an insightful analysis of the issue you're researching.

You must also be prepared to discuss your insights into how history works during the first week of school.

Specs:

3-4 pages, double-spaced
12-point font
1-inch margins

Evidence of Research
Sharp Analysis