Mental Health

Mental health difficulties do not affect only adults. Children, teenagers, and young adults also can have mental health difficulties. Three out of four people with mental health difficulties actually showed signs before they were 24 years old and one in five children is diagnosed with a mental health disorder (Centers for Disease Control, 2018).

Are you having trouble doing the things you like to do or need to do because of how you feel—like going to school, work or hanging out with friends? Are you having a rough day? Have you been feeling down for a while?

Talk to your parents, guardian, or a trusted adult if you or your friends have experienced ANY of these things:

- Trouble eating or sleeping
- Difficulty performing daily tasks, like going to school or class
- Not wanting to hang out with friends or family
- Not wanting to do things you usually enjoy
- Fighting a lot with family and friends
- Feeling like you cannot control your emotions
- Having trouble with your relationships with family and friends
- Having low or no energy
- Feeling hopeless
- Feeling numb or like nothing matters
- Continually thinking about certain things or memories

- Feeling confused, forgetful, edgy, angry, upset, worried, or scared
- Changes in mood or behavior, either positive or negative
- Wanting to harm yourself or others
- Smoking, drinking, or using other drugs

Everyone goes through tough times, and no matter how long you have had something on your mind, it is important that you talk to someone about it.
